“ Jean had such a love of life and thirst for knowledge. I can picture her sitting in the spirit world holding Patrick's hand and taking in the wonder of it all. Her faith was solid. Her spirit was so strong and she radiated positive energy. Somehow she was always able to find the shiny oyster at the bottom of the sea in everything she talked about. One thing that I was able to learn about from her was unconditional love. If you could step back and have a look at it from the outside, it was there. She spoke of the loving care she received from sister, she said, I don't know if I could do this for anyone, but my sister and her husband are doing it for me. There is no way I could repay them for the comfort, respect and honour they provided me with. Jean was so very proud of her mother, she taught her to respect herself, genuinely care for others, the value of education and most importantly the love of God. Jean said she could feel her mom tip toeing into the room to check on her, she said, my mom (in that slow southern drawl she inherited from her dad) thought I was sleeping but I knew she was there and it was comforting to know she was still checking in on me. Her mother was able to ignite the fire of learning inside of her and that light never faded. Jean was pleased to know that, even in her illness, she was teaching the doctors a thing or two about Cancer patients. She spoke of writing a book, I hope someone finishes it for her. Jean loved her nieces and nephews and had high hopes and expectations of them. They brought her a lot of joy and she said they just looked at me and saw their auntie, nothing more, that was comforting. She was so very happy when the Cancer Support group came to visit and sang to her, she missed music so much. Jean was such a very strong woman in every sense of the word, mentally, emotionally and spiritually. Physically, her body got tired and she needed to take a rest. I just learned of her journey yesterday. This morning I went to Lake Erie saw the rising sun and sang a travelling song for her.

Baa maa pii, Jean, you started a new journey . . .
