Hi Girls: I lived with your mom for 6 months many years ago and have such warm memories of our friendship that developed over that time. I loved her generous heart and love for everyone that she encountered. My sympathy to you, her lovely daughters and all her family. The last time I saw her at the residence in Toronto, she sang "You are my sunshine" to me...Gotta Love her...Love Judy Bentley

March 19, 2018 - A Poem

*My mom died this morning.
And I wanted to believe she looked peaceful curled a bit on her side with her foot sticking out of the blankets*

My mom died this morning and I couldn't cry at first I only wanted to capture her spirit instead of residual body heat but Jesus got to her before I did and that was a good thing because I would never have been able to let her go

My mom died today and I wanted to share the news with every stranger who didn't understand why I had to drive through Tim Horton's twice and the absurdity of eight boxes of lotion tissue that burned my eyes more than the tears did and why I couldn't write the sign for my door in a way that made sense and why it made me cry when the tape didn't stick and why the birds were so special in the garden outside her window

My mother died today alone in the place that should have been home and I wanted it to give me a free pass to hate myself for not being there when she said goodbye for not holding her hand just a little bit longer for not making sure she was not afraid

My mom died today.

*I miss you so much, Mom, so very much.
I love you.*

That was beautiful Brenda, I have had a hard time trying to write something as I feel your pain ... so much, so much. She was a great lady and was always very patient with us as teenagers and that wasn't easy. My thoughts are with you, Donna and Julie.

It would have been your 87th birthday tomorrow, Mom. It's not going to be any more emotional than any other day that has passed since you left us, because every day since then has been almost unbearably emotional. So many memories, so many triggers for floods of tears... and Christmas this year will be so so very sad without you laughing at me and my various stresses. Every Christmas carol I play on my iTunes makes me think of you, especially since most of them were copied from your CD collection!! Thank you for sharing your gift of music, Mom, and your humour, and your ability to shrug and say "let's cross that bridge when we come to it". I have so many gifts from you. Thank you, Mom. I will be remembering you when I sing in the choir at church tomorrow evening, part of a community Christmas Carol service. You would have loved it. Love forever, Brenda
