“ It was a year ago today that you passed away. I found out about a week after that, and since have learned more about your passing. I remember walking with you to the Church meals in London, how defensive you got when other men looked at me... that was nice... I remember learning new words in your language, and about your people's history.

Grief is a "journey". It has been good to talk, and to cry. I am angry that he was treated like so much street trash by some people I knew, and that his bad behaviour was tragically caused by the addiction to the drink. What is most sad to me are the times that I did not get to spend with him.. plans we had made... and the fact that I had someone wanting to have a child with me, who is now no longer on this planet.

i feel like I am still talking to you like you are here, but I know that you have passed on to what your religion calls "The Spirit World". I have many memories, good and bad, of our friendship since I first met you in 2003, I believe it was. I am sorry that things turned sour towards the end.
